

Bogalusa Blues & Heritage Festival

The Bogalusa Blues and Heritage Festival was born in 2012 after Mayor Charles Mizell, who was working to reclaim and enhance Cassidy Park as part of an overall transformation of the economically struggling city, added the component of culture to the purview of the city's Parks and Recreation Committee.

In just five short years the Bogalusa Blues & Heritage Festival has become known as one of the best festivals in the New Orleans region and Gulf Coast.

Bogalusa is the festival to attend outside of New Orleans. What New Orleans is to jazz, Bogalusa is to the blues.

Putting on a slate of entertainers tilted heavily toward the blues each year, the word is out...

Glide Magazine reported, "... the Bogalusa Blues & Heritage Festival won't be much of a secret anymore." Voted "Best New Event of 2012" by the Louisiana Association of Fairs & Festivals, and named Offbeat Magazine's "Best Festival Outside New Orleans", the Bogalusa Blues & Heritage Festival is a can't miss. Held in beautiful newly-renovated Cassidy Park, BBHF has something for everyone.

Camping along the banks of the Bogue Lusa Creek is rapidly growing into a fan favorite. There is no better way to take in everything the festival has to offer than to wake up by a beautiful stream to gentle music in the distance and the smell of delicious food in the air.
